“ Growing up, Berny loved taking my sister and I to the craft store to buy supplies for what I always used to call "The broken flower pot". We would each get to pick out a small terra cotta flower pot, a few small fake flowers, dirt and various other little things. Berny would tell us to put the small terra cotta pot into a brown paper bag and drop it onto the ground so that it would break into pieces (my favorite part!). Afterwards, she would help us glue it back together but in a way that it still looked like it had fallen over and broke apart. She would help us add the flower into the dirt that looked like it was spilling out, and then glue other things around the pot as decorative pieces. We would sit our broken flower pots on the windowsill where it would stay. It was one of my favorite things to do with her as a little girl that I plan to continue with my own step-daughter.

I will miss her warm and caring nature. She made my step-daughter feel so comfortable. She had such calming energy around her and was always easy to talk to.

We will miss her crocheting and her fuzzy scarves that she used to knit for us every year in bright colors.

Berny brought my dad happiness and I know that she is bringing that same light with her in heaven.
